

Money Advice

Money is a sensitive topic, sort like a taboo to talk about it. We are supposed to know what to do and be great at it . We are not supposed to talk about it because it's inappropriate, dirty and not so classy. We are ashamed if we don't have it, we're even more ashamed to admit we want it. It causes us daily stress and it is absolutely impossible to hide from.

Growing up, people gave us advice after advice about money and that advice may or may not help us and some we search from the grand-master called "Google", have you thought of the best single piece of advice that you have so far received? What is it? Has it changed you or have you ever acted on it? If you don't, don't be too harsh to yourself. Let's do something about it by first writing it down here. Acknowledge it and come back when you are ready.

What is the single most effective piece of financial advice you've ever received?
